Dear Colleague:

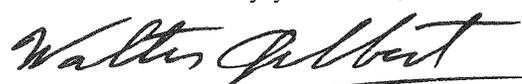

The Society of Fellows is now receiving nominations for three-year Junior Fellowships beginning July 1, 2019. The enclosed leaflet explains the purpose and scope of the fellowships and the current rules for their administration. Men and women interested in any field of study are eligible for these fellowships; they should be of the highest calibre of intellectual achievement, i.e. comparable to the most successful candidates for junior faculty positions at leading universities.

The deadline for nominations is Friday, August 10th. (No nomination will be accepted with a postmark past the deadline; an emailed nomination will not be accepted. You may, however, fax your nomination letter and form to 617-495-2645 and follow up by mailing the original hard copy.) A nomination sent in April, May or June is most beneficial to your candidate because it will allow plenty of time for submission of work and will avoid missing the early deadline of August 10th. Please mail or express mail your recommendation letter along with the nomination form enclosed, listing the names of three additional referees who are prepared to write letters and submit them electronically, at the latest, by mid-September. Upon receipt of your nomination, we shall contact the candidate, requesting samples of work, and the referees, asking them for letters of recommendation by a specified date. Please note: the Society will request that the letters of recommendation and candidate materials be submitted electronically - not by email, but through a link we will provide in our correspondence with them. After receipt of the nomination form, the three referees and candidate will be contacted by our office both by regular mail and email. (This is why full and accurate email addresses are necessary to process your nomination.) In our email to the referees and candidate, full instructions for uploading will be provided to each, along with a password to enter the secure site.

The Society has always sought the best possible candidates at an early stage of their scholarly careers, regardless of their fields, and is looking for only truly extraordinary scholars since in all fields combined the selection generally is limited to twelve. These prize fellowships are especially useful for able scholars who plan to work in fields traditionally kept apart in graduate instruction. No rigid formula governs our choice, but we expect that candidates will have completed their routine training for advanced study and will be far along in the dissertation stage, able to submit samples of independent work (e.g. articles, papers, dissertation chapters) in support of their candidacies. (If still pursuing the Ph.D., Junior Fellows should be prepared to finish their degrees within a year of becoming fellows. If already a recipient of the degree, they should not be more than one year past the Ph.D. at the time the fellowship commences. Most Junior Fellows receive the Ph.D. just prior to the start of the fellowship.)

The Senior Fellows take particular pleasure in having an opportunity to elect candidates from universities other than Harvard.

Sincerely yours,

Walter Gilbert
Chair

THE SOCIETY OF FELLOWS
HARVARD UNIVERSITY

The purpose of the Society is to give men and women at an early stage of their scholarly careers an opportunity to pursue their studies in any department of the University, free from formal requirements. They must be persons of exceptional ability, originality, and resourcefulness, and should be of the highest calibre of intellectual achievement, comparable to successful candidates for junior faculty positions at leading universities. These Junior Fellows are selected by the Senior Fellows, who with the President and Provost of the University, and the Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences (Senior Fellows, ex officio), administer the Society. Those elected receive three-year fellowships.

The Society was organized in 1933 under the terms of a gift from A. Lawrence Lowell, then President Emeritus of Harvard. This gift was made in memory of Mr. Lowell's wife and is known as the Anna Parker Lowell Fund. Mr. Lowell was convinced of the value of informal discussions between scholars in different academic fields. Hence, from the time of its foundation, the Senior and Junior Fellows have met for dinner every Monday night during term-time; they are frequently joined by visiting scholars. Junior Fellows also lunch together twice a week.

To be eligible for a Junior Fellowship, a candidate must be at an early stage of his or her scholarly career. Men and women interested in any field of study are accepted. Most Junior Fellows receive the Ph.D. just prior to the start of the fellowship. If still pursuing the Ph.D., Junior Fellows should be at the dissertation stage of their theses and be prepared to finish their degrees within a year of becoming fellows. If already a recipient of the degree, they should not be much more than one year past the Ph.D. at the time the fellowship commences.

The number of Junior Fellows at any one time normally is limited to thirty-six, and usually twelve are chosen each year. The term of appointment is three years, and no extensions are granted. During the academic year, Junior Fellows are required to reside in Cambridge or close-by neighboring communities and to regularly attend all of the weekly lunches and dinners. Junior Fellows are expected to work full-time in the office or lab space provided to them by the University during term-time. Junior Fellows are not subject to examination, are not required to make reports, receive no credit for courses, and may not be candidates for any degree other than the Ph.D. Those who are still pursuing the Ph.D. should have completed their routine training for advanced work and should be well along in the writing of their theses before becoming fellows. They may complete the writing of their theses and proceed to such final or special examinations as the universities of their candidacies may require, and may be granted the degree of Ph.D.

Junior Fellows are selected for their resourcefulness, initiative, and intellectual curiosity, and because their work holds exceptional promise. They are free to devote their entire time to productive scholarship. They may undertake sustained projects of research or other original work, or they may devote their time to the acquisition of accessory disciplines so as to prepare themselves for the investigation of problems lying between conventional fields. Because of this complete freedom of choice and action, it is important that candidates should have demonstrated their capacity for independent work.

During 2018/2019 the stipend for Junior Fellows in their first year will be $80,000. The facilities of most branches of the University, both for instruction and for research, are open to Junior Fellows. Candidates whose research requires substantial laboratory space or extensive equipment should explore arrangements with the appropriate members of the faculty at Harvard for the necessary support. If there is any problem in this regard, candidates should inform the Chair.

Candidates are nominated for Junior Fellowships, generally by those under whom they have studied. Applications are not accepted from candidates themselves. A letter of nomination should include an assessment of the candidate's work and promise, the candidate's complete contact information, including current residential mailing address and email address, and the names, addresses and email addresses of three additional people who have agreed to provide letters of recommendation at the latest by mid-September. Upon receipt of the nomination, letters of recommendation are requested from the referees listed, and the candidate is asked to submit a sample of written work (dissertation chapters, articles, papers) along with a statement describing the studies he or she would like to pursue while a Junior Fellow. On the basis of the materials submitted, the Senior Fellows select a certain number of candidates for interview. It is from this number that the final selection is made. (The Society pays the traveling expenses of those candidates interviewed.)

*The deadline for receiving nominations for Junior Fellowships that begin July 1, 2019 is August 10, 2018. All letters should be sent to The Society of Fellows, Harvard University, 78 Mount Auburn Street, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138. No nomination will be accepted with a postmark past the deadline. Please note: emailed nominations will not be accepted.
